

Golf is essentially a one-man game. Team play is secondary. Thus at Stanford the golf squad is made up of good golfers who can pile up honors on their own and play together once or twice during the year • • • At Pebble Beach in February, eight Stanford golfers swang around the difficult course to a Pacific Coast Intercollegiate Championship. Bill Oneal won the second flight, and Jack Wallace was runner-up in the finals • • • Entering on their own, but under the Card banner, Stanford golfers invaded the Sacramento Open, San Jose Open, San Francisco City, and the Northern California Amateur Tournaments to place high in every one. At the National Intercollegiates in Chicago last summer, the Card team lost only to Yale • • • Playing California in April on a home-and-home basis, Card men won by a heavy score, after previously trouncing Pomona. Wallace, Manning, Halaby, Cannon, Boyd, Wiet, Edwards, Oneal, Davis, Crable, Wyeth, and Hyman all earned letters.

FRESHMAN GOLF

Good as the Card varsity golf team was this year, next year it will be better, because from this year's freshmen squad will come some of the best golfers Stanford has ever seen. In the Northern California Amateur Tournament in April, two Class of '40 men—Bob Breyer and Jack Showalter—reached the quarter-finals ahead of every varsity man who entered • • • In their principal intercollegiate matches, the freshmen roundly trounced California, 23 to 4. In all their minor matches, against neighboring high schools and junior colleges, only one half-point was scored against them. San Francisco Poly High School, their strongest opponent, they defeated $8\frac{1}{2}$ to $\frac{1}{2}$ • • • All ace golfers, the Class of '40's "wonder team" consisted of Dick Wright, Don Kennedy, Bob Breyer, Jack Showalter, David MacHarg, Robert Roos, Charles Russell, Sherman Selix, and Charles Flannery. Of these nine men, numeral winners all, Coach Eddie Twiggs had this to say: "They made up the most outstanding freshman golf team ever to play for Stanford."
