Two Northern California prep stars, Art Schroeder of San Francisco and Roland Conklin from Porterville, were the main cogs in Coach Bud Finger's yearling outfit. By midseason the Frosh looked strong enough to go through another undefeated schedule. Doug Read, Jim Johnson, Dick Peterson, a stroker from the New England links, and Don Liebendorfer rounded out the starting sixsome. For one of their best wins, the Papooses swamped the Cal Cubs. In the Intercollegiates Schroeder had a qualifying 78.

Giving Stanford a powerful one-two-three punch, Bob Crozier, Bud Moe, and Ernie Kellberg led the varsity golfers to another successful year. This season the team was coached by Charles "Bud" Finger, a former Indian golfer, who also assumed duties of professional for the Stanford course. Finger replaced Eddie Twiggs, who for many years trained championship golf squads.

Crozier won the All-University tournament and the Autumn Quarter matches. His early season 69's helped to score victories in competition. Bud Moe, who along with Crozier played on last year's team which placed third in national collegiate matches on the local course, consistently carded par scores. Ernie Kellberg, another letterman, was medalist and runner-up in the All-University tournament. Cully Ingram, John Wallace, and Aubrey Devine completed the first six for the Varsity in early season.

In their first match the Varsity lost to the Los Altos Country Club Seniors, 17-10. Next on the agenda was Santa Clara, and the Broncos had their tails twisted to the tune of 21-6. Gathering aid from the Frosh squad, the Indians downed the Alumni, 25½-19½, in their third match.
