Collegiate golf at its best was displayed this year by Bud Finger's Varsity golf squad. Paced by freshman Fred Brown, who played consistent sub-par golf all year, the Indian linksmen recorded their second straight undefeated slate in Pacific Coast Conference competition. Their only dual meet loss came at the hands of the powerful San Jose State six midway in the season. It was in this match, played on San Jose's home course, that Brown shot a seven under par 65 to ease out Ken Venturi, Spartan ace who shot a 67 which is by no means poor. Stressing long-ball hitting from the tee and a sparkling short game, the Indians eliminated their opponents easily in most cases. The team on the whole was very well balanced as almost the entire squad shot in the 70's regularly. Other than Brown, senior Dick McElyea, freshman Warren Daily, Art Schroeder, Paul Palmquist, Dick Taylor, and Grant Spaeth were all influential in Stanford's success. And with a majority of these men returning along with several fine golfers from this year's outstanding JayVees, the Indian linksmen should continue their winning ways next year.
