Champions

of the AAWU last year, and 11th ranked nationally, Stanford's varsity golfers look even stronger this year. Led by sophomore Tom Watson, and veterans Sandy Adelman and Greg Pitzer, Coach Bud Finger's crew has so far compiled a 5-0 record, defeating San Jose City College, Santa Clara, San Francisco State, Cal State at Hayward and the San Francisco Olympic Club. The team also won the prestigious Fresno Classic, an annual tournament that features the top collegiate teams in the West. With nine matches still remaining, Stanford is already ranked among the collegiate golf powers.

The members of the team are, in order of current ranking, Tom Watson, Greg Pitzer, Sandy Adelman, Bob Riddell, Ray Isbell, and Jeff Blankenburg. Watson, who seems a sure bet for All-American honors, has been sensational in his first season of varsity competition. He is a golfer with the rare combination of power and fine touch. Along with Watson, both Pitzer and Adelman (last year's All-American) could be in line for national recognition.

The frosh have also had a fine season, winning all their matches except for a tie with the College of San Mateo. The top frosh golfer so far has been Tom Keelin. The other members of the squad are Steve Ross, Zac Miller, Pete Harpster, Mike Margher, Sandy McCall, Tom Guerny and Jim Dwulet.
